[V][N] April 30th – Reunification Day in Vietnam

April 30th is a national holiday in Vietnam called Reunification Day. It marks the end of the Vietnam War in 1975, when the North and the South became one united country again. People across the country celebrate this day every year to remember peace and freedom.

In the past, Reunification Day was celebrated with big parades and loud music. People hung red flags in front of their homes. Streets were full of marching groups, including students, soldiers, and workers. Many families stayed home to listen to stories on the radio or watch black-and-white films about the historic event.

Today, April 30th is still very important. People have a day off from school and work. In many cities, families visit museums or historical places to learn more about the war and Vietnamese history. Some people travel, others gather to remember the past, and many enjoy fireworks at night.

It is a day for remembering the past and honoring national unity. Reunification Day teaches young people to value freedom and reminds everyone how important peace is for the future.
